The Copyright Act includes an exception for educational institutions that permits the capturing and streaming of a copyright-compliant lecture through your college’s learning management system.

*Refer to Section 30.01 of the Copyright Act. *

A copyright-compliant lecture makes use of copyright-protected works only as permitted by the Copyright Act, your college’s Fair Dealing Policy, your library’s licenses agreements, or as permitted by the copyright owner.

As long as the uses of copyright-protected content were permitted in the live lecture, those uses of content can also be included in the captured and streamed lecture.

This is conditional upon the destruction of the captured lecture within 30 days of the final course evaluations being sent to your students. Please note that it is the recording of the lecture, not the content used in the lecture, which must be destroyed.

Your college’s copyright practices may state that captured lectures which adhere to your college’s Fair Dealing Policy do not have to be destroyed within 30 days of the final course evaluations being sent to students. Check your college’s copyright practices to find out how your college is interpreting this exception.

For more information, always refer to your college’s copyright practices or ask the person designated by your college to answer copyright questions. Your college library is a good place to start!
